Viola is a spritely old lady with twinkling eyes and a gently managing disposition. She darts around helping out the other patients and carefully tending the patio garden. She almost always seems to have a smile on her face. Her only limitation seems to be the cane she uses to help her balance.

Dean is in a wheelchair. He is young, thin and vitally interested in everything that is going on around him. He talks to everyone and continually asks questions.

Charles is an old-timer around the center, he was one of the first patients. An erect, elderly man, he sits in his wheelchair. With eyes like an eagle and a lightening quick mind, it's hard to imagine anything could confine him.

All three are patients at Casa Colina West Valley and they represent the wide range of patients cared for at the facility.

Casa Colina West Valley will soon celebrate its second anniversary serving the rehabilitation needs of the people of Upland, Rancho Cucamonga, Chino, Ontario and Fontana.

"It's been a very productive time for us," said director Susan Kee, R.N. "We have seen an increase in our patient load and more physicians are becoming aware that we are here and that there is no need to send patients all the way to Casa Colina (Pomona) or to Loma Linda."

The West Valley facility provides adult health day care, a day hospital, disability adjustment training and outpatient rehabilitation.

Tucked in the back of the business center on Arrow and Archibald, the facility is centrally located for West Valley residents.

"Sometimes I think we're too hard to locate but this (location) has worked out ideally for us and the patients," Kee said.

Kee explained the services offered by the center which is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. except on legal holidays.

"Adult Day Health Services provides for an organized continuum of outpatient services for those with a disabling condition," Kee said.

Under the day program, West Valley provides a transition from inpatient acute care or a rehabilitation hospital. It offers an alternative to skilled nursing facilities or a home health care program, an alternative to premature total institutionalization in a residential care facility, respite and supportive services for the family,and it allows patients to continue living in their homes and communities.

Among the services offered during adult day care are needs assessment, nursing services, rehabilitation services, psycho-social intervention, activity programs, nutritional services and transportation.

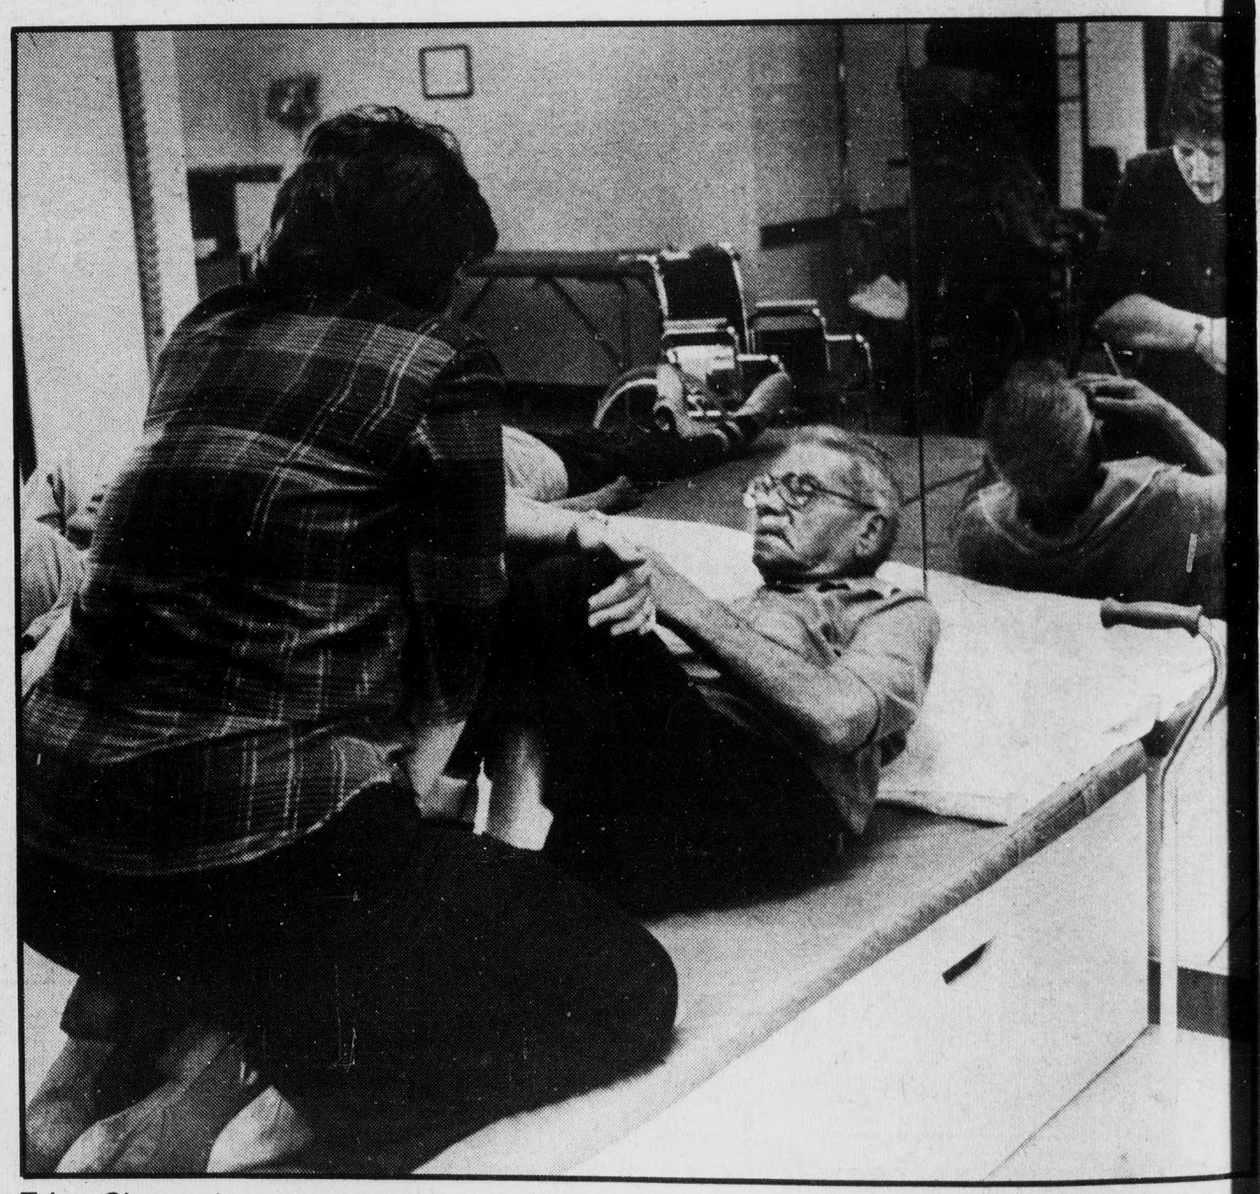

"Our patients range in age from 18 to 84 and most of our patients are either stroke or brain-damage victims," Kee said, "although we are getting a larger percentage of amputees and Medi-Cal patients than previously."

Kee said the influx of Medi-Cal patients is the result of changes in government guidelines, resulting in people coming directly to Casa Colina instead of spending time in a rehabilitation hospital.

Day hospital services range from nursing to physical, occupational, speech and recreational therapy; psychological services; driver's training; transportation; leisure counseling; medical consultation; cognitive retaining services; mid-day meal and snacks, and dietary counseling and training.

Those enrolled in outpatient services have a specific program tailored to fit their needs, Kee said. Services include many of those included in the other areas and additionally, neuropsychology, speech and language therapy, orthotics/prothetics and medical rehabilitation consultation, service and supervision.

Disability adjustment training provides therapeutic and restorative services with emphasis on personal, social, community and independent living and homemaker skills, as well a pre-vocational/educational adjustment training.

"We are not a road's end, but through our programs we try to prepare those who can to re-enter the mainstream of life," Kee said.

Very basic tasks like being able to perform sanitary and grooming functions can be re-learned at the center. "We have a bathroom that is totally equipped with adaptive devices available for homes. Patients and their families can get a much better idea what they need after seeing and using the ones we have here."

Adult Day Health Care is a new concept, Kee said. "Day care for those who are handicapped has been around a long time but what we can offer is much more intense. This is not just a place for a family to drop someone off. Here we attempt to stretch them to the limit. Often there is much more a stroke victim or head-injury patient can do with a little help, therapy and direction."

Funding for the different programs varies from Medi-Cal and Medi-Care to private payment, insurance, Workmen's Compensation or California State Department of Rehabilitation funds. "It all depends on the program and status of the patient," Kee said.

West Valley officials are talking about expanding into the building next door since the facility is averaging about 25 patients per day and is licensed for as many as 30.

"Our growth has been gradual but we know we can handle the maximum without any problems. We have the staff and the facility."

All patients must have a physician's referral to be admitted but community members interested in the programs available can call her at 987-6757 for information, Kee said.

An informational public open house will be held Saturday, June 4, at the Holiday Inn in Ontario beginning at 10 a.m. to acquaint interested individuals with the Casa Colina West Valley services. □

Uplander competes in water ski racing

By Joy Sommer

Cyndi Testa spends much of her free time and money in pursuing a national title in water ski racing while holding down a full-time career at Upland Recreation Department as recreation supervisor.

Testa entered her first race in 1978 and captured a first place in the women's novice division. "I was floored," she said with a grin. "No one wins the first time they try so I figured it must be the right thing for me to do."

Her luck—and skill— held and she placed second the next time she raced. "It may sound like that was a good thing to happen but, unfortunately, national rules say once you trophy twice, they bump you up to the next classification."

So the novice Testa suddenly found herself competing with women who had a lot more experience in racing. "That's when I hit a losing streak — all of a sudden I was in there with the big girls and my inexperience had to be overcome."

Testa had been skiing for fun since she was six but, she pointed out, racing is a different matter. "You ski differently, you even hold your body at a different angle. It's sometimes hard for me, especially in marathons, not to fall back into the 'play ski' habits."

Testa is now competing in both circle races and marathons. Currently she is rated fifth in Women's 21-29 in circle races.

"The circle races involve going around a lake for 10 to 15 miles and you accumulate points in each race you enter for the Nationals. The top three at the end of the season advance to the Nationals.

Testa prefers marathon skiing even though it takes more stamina. The circle races present more danger of injury because, "they are faster and much more competitive."

Marathon races begin in February and vary from 35 to 75 miles each. The U.S. is divided into five regions and in her region she is currently rated second.

"They keep track of points here, too, and they award a title," she said.

Testa, like many competitive skiers, has had her share of injuries. "I was hurt last year in the Women's Open. I fell and strained ligaments in both knees and ended up with two black eyes."

But since she has advanced to the Nationals, there was no way she wasn't going to compete in them. "I should have known better. I wasn't a 100 percent and I had two bad falls during the races."

Her first accident came during the early rounds. "I fell and sprained my shoulders but I finished that race," she said.

Her next fall came in the marathons. "That one really scared me. I opened my eyes and realized I was underwater, I was disoriented and the wind was knocked out of me." She was found to be suffering from minor shock, had a concussion, blood pockets in her wrists and both eyes had been blackened.

"That fall sidelined me for a while. It really scared me and it's only been the last few races that I've gotten my confidence back."

She skis Australian-style with one arm behind her back, holding the rope. The other hand is used for balance in front. Is it awkward? On the contrary, it's much more comfortable and there is less chance of strain, Testa says.

The only drawback she sees is because of increased speed there are more injuries and those that occur when skiing Australian-style are more severe. Her next race will be on Father's Day at Lake Havasu. Although Cyndi and her husband Nick have their own boat, Cyndi doesn't ski behind it.

"It's one thing they tell you early on, don't ski behind a husband or boyfriend because they worry about you too much. I've had the same driver, Jimmy Anderson, from Phoenix, for the last three years," she said. "Nick drives for four other skiers."

Testa has also competed in the Catalina Marathon (over and back) and came in first. "I've done it twice but this year was the roughest. Something like 140 boats started and less than half finished."

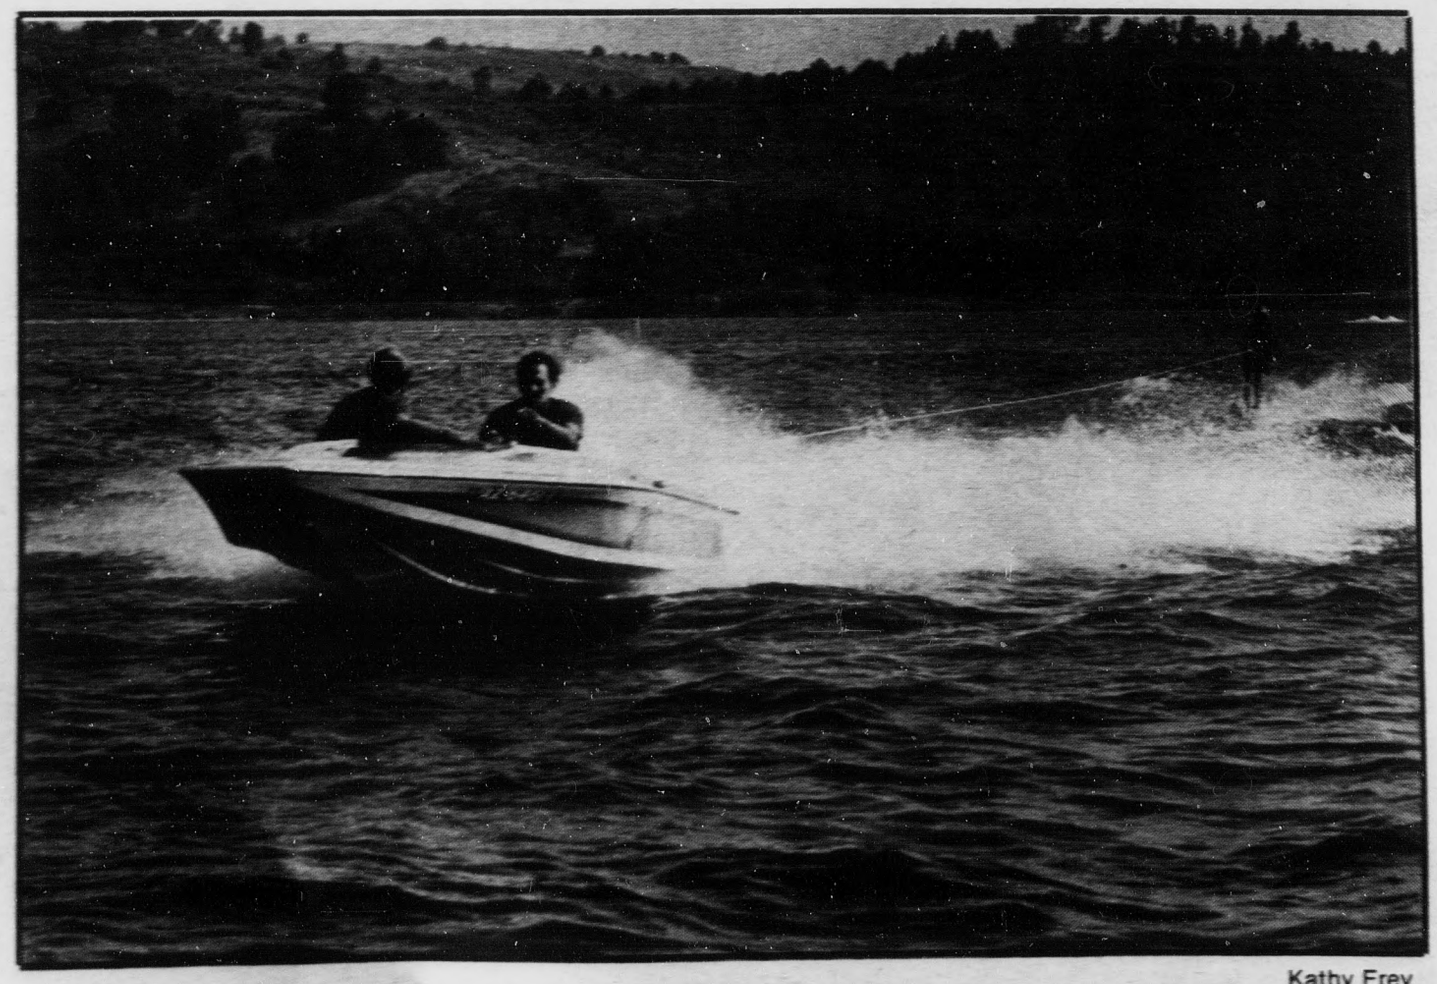

The skis she uses to race are unlike the normal play ski, Testa said. "My ski is customized, a combination of wood and fiber. This is such a specialized sport, you have to have specialized equipment."

Specialized equipment isn't cheap. Her ski (just the blank) was ticketed at $400 while the binding was $250. She also wears a costly special wet suit over her bathing suit. Then there is the cost of the races themselves.

"No, it's not inexpensive to compete but luckily Nick and I decided to commit ourselves to it — it's our hobby."

Cyndi Testa is a woman with a goal — becoming the top water ski racer in the country.

Historical preservation awareness growing

By Maxine Strane and Marge Stamm

The need for historic preservation in America is becoming more and more apparent each year as we progressively lose buildings, landscapes, and artifacts of historic significance to "progress." In the last 15 or so years the communities of Upland and Rancho Cucamonga have lost a great deal of our rich heritage to non-caring land developers, uninformed and unaware residents.

Concerned members of both communities have already accepted their responsibility to its citizens in preserving local historical heritage. The Pioneer Museum (Chaffey Communities Cultural Center) in Upland and the Rains House (Casa de Rancho Cucamonga) in Rancho Cucamonga are two examples of local preservation efforts. The Pioneer Museum, once an Upland church, now houses hundreds of relics and mementos from earlier days. The 1860 restored Rains House is the cradle of both cities, the center of the 13,000 acre rancho that included all of Upland and most of Rancho Cucamonga today.

Historic preservation is a human need in our fast developing world. At one time it was thought you had to personally own something in order to preserve it, but that idea is changing. Now individuals, communities and even entire cities across the United States are becoming involved. Not only houses and public buildings of historic and architectural significance are being preserved, but historic sites and scenic landmarks as well (such as a tree-lined street of a stone wall).

A good example of a method of historic preservation was the formation of a Historic Preservation Commission by our foresighted city fathers shortly after the incorporation of Rancho Cucamonga in 1977. The commission's purpose is to identify, protect, and record our cultural heritage for future generations.

The following statements by members of the Historic Preservation Commission gives personal viewpoints of the importance of historic preservation:

Commissioner Melicent Arner states, "Historic preservation enhances community life, helps us understand and enjoy our heritage, and fosters a feeling of pride, while at the same time encourages a sense of continuity with the past."

"This area's rich heritage should be preserved for future generations," says Commissioner Ada Cooper, a resident of Cucamonga for the past 60 years. "The first dry-land grapes were developed in our area and the citrus industry brought people to our community. They found living peaceful and rewarding here. Our community has been made up of many nationalities — working and living together in harmony."

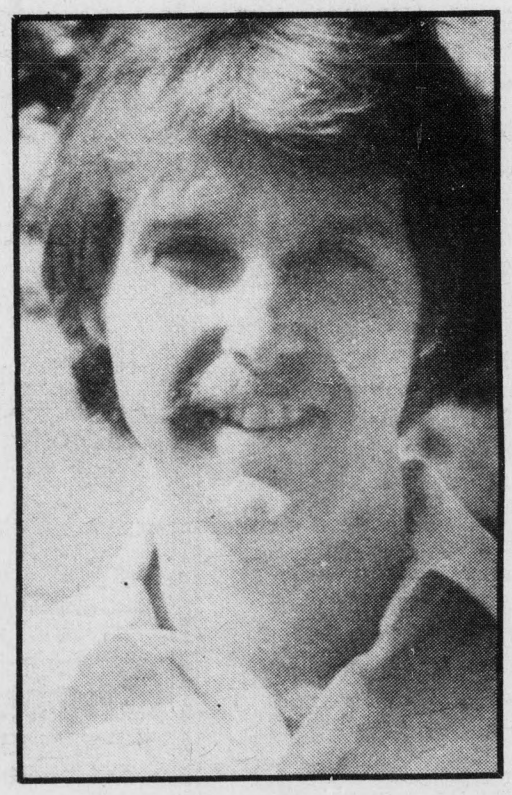

Commissioner Helen Kilmurray feels, "Newcomers to our area are unaware of the history that has taken place here. It is important that this history be recorded on paper and tape before the old-timers who know of these events are deceased and can no longer pass them on by word of mouth. History is a part of our

Implant is miracle for Upland girl

Story by David Miller

When Larry and Noelle Husted learned thattheir daughter's battle against meningitis in November 1980 had robbed her of her hearing, they were stunned. When the little girl's speech began to deteroriate shortly thereafter, they were confused and shocked. Perhaps worst of all, they felt very alone.

Fortunately for the Husteds, however, this story appears to be headed toward a happy ending. For in the months between her sickness and time her story was told by The Daily Report and other publications, the Husteds found help. And, thanks to a form of surgery for which Tracy served as a pioneer patient of sorts, their daughter, now 5, has regained some of her hearing and much of her speech.

In April 1981, Tracy was on the receiving end of a modern medical miracle: She became at that time the youngest-ever recipient of a cochlear implant, an electronic device that has served to restore a considerable part of her hearing.

The operation on the Upland youngster was conducted by Dr. William House of the House Ear Institute of Los Angeles. He had been performing implant operations on patients considerably older than Tracy since 1961.

A small magnetic coil the size of a dime was implanted in the bone directly behind Tracy's ear. An electrode attached to the coil was placed in the cochlea (Latin for "snail shell," which the tiny organ resembles) of her inner ear to replace the thousands of tiny hair cells destroyed by the meningitis. The device was expanded further by an additional coil in an ear mold similar in appearance to a hearing aid.

The entire apparatus, which cost $7,000, is powered by two nine-volt batteries that Tracy wears on a small pack on her back. With it on, she picks up sounds equal to about half of what a normal-hearing person can hear.

While what she hears has been referred to as "electronic sound" — her mother says it's "sort of like a radio station that's not tuned in quite right, with lots of static" — but the Upland girl is certainly better off than she was prior to the operation.

When they rushed Tracy to the hospital just after Thanksgiving in 1980, the Husteds were told there was a chance that their daughter might not survive the meningitis. When she did, they were startled to find — some four days after she was released from the hospital — that she could no longer hear. They had primarily been speaking to her face-to-face, and Tracy apparently learned at age three how to understand what her parents were saying by reading their lips.

But one day, while shouting at Tracy, who was watching the television set, Noelle Husted discovered that her daughter could not hear. Shortly thereafter, deprived of the ability to hear herself talk, her speech began to fade away. Within a short time, it was difficult for the Husteds to understand anything that she said.

Enter William House, the director of research, principal investigator and namesake of the House Ear Institute, a non-profit organization associated with the University of Southern California School of Medicine. Since 1961, when the institute developed the first permanent cochlear implant, some 200 deaf people between the ages of three and 71 have received the device.

One of only a handful of facilities that makes the implant available to people with certain inner ear problems, HEI is believed to be the lone organization conducting clinical trials with the device on a worldwide scale. And in 1981, Tracy became the institute's first child recipient.

It doesn't matter, Larry and Noelle Husted say, that Tracy is not able to hear perfectly. For five long months, she heard nothing but memories.

"Tracy went from a normal speaking person to garbled nothings in two months," Larry says. "We felt just totally helpless. Everything we had experienced in the past, we'd always been able to take care of it. But when we found out Tracy was deaf, all of the terrible thoughts went through our minds."

Pioneer surgery provides miracle

The Husteds were told that if they didn't get their daughter into a special education program, her speech would deteroriate rapidly. And it did. Frustrated by what they considered to be slow-moving and perhaps ill-advised special education officials, they looked elsewhere for help. And at first, they found none. Noelle says the couple felt as though they were "back in the middle ages."

Fortunately, they found out about the House Ear Institute and the wheels of the "miracle" were set into motion.

Two months after the primary surgery was performed Tracy was back at the institute being fitted by an external stimulator. This device, similar in shape and size to a deck of playing cards, converts sound to electricity and then channels the electricity to the wire buried in the girl's cochlea. From there, impulses are carried along the accoustic nerve to the brain, which interprets the impulses as sound.

She wears the stimulator suspended on her back, tucked beneath waist-length curly blonde hair. The primary benefit of the implant is that it has enhanced Tracy's ability to pick up certain "environmental" sounds, such as the ringing of a telephone or the howling of a police or ambulance siren.

Limited or no, the implant has enabled many deaf people to modulate and improve their voices, and it has brought sound to many a silent world.

Tracy wears the apparatus most of the time, except for when she is in bed, taking a bath or taking part in certain physical activities.

Although the implant does not exactly provide Tracy with a clear understanding of speech, the girl's parents say that they can make out most of what she says and that her vocabularly is becoming clearer all the time.

The Husteds credit Richard Lewis, an Upland habilitative audiologist, with much of Tracy's advancement. Working one hour a week to make the girl use her hearing to the fullest, he often must cover his mouth to prevent her from cheating through lip-reading.

"Her progression since the operation has been super," Noelle Husted says. "It has gotten to the point where when she's got the implant on, she's just about like anybody else.

"I can understand about 95 percent of what she says. Every now and then she'll come up with something I can't quite understand, but she's getting better all the time."

The Husteds have chosen to share their good fortune with parents of other deaf children. Larry, an employee of Bianchi Vineyards, is national co-chairperson of Parent-to-Parent, an outreach of the House Ear Institute which seeks to provide information and assistance to those families.

"We believe the biggest problem today is the emotional impact that it leaves upon the parents," he says. "Divorce, heavy drinking — anything to avoid the public, anything to avoid the problem of realizing that your child is deaf.

"We want to let people out there know that when their child is deaf, they are not alone."

The Husteds have received a number of calls from parents of deaf children, and they say they are happy to help in any way they can. In fact, several children have had surgery for a cochlear implant in the years following Tracy's pioneering experience.

Freeze of 1913 cost my father his job

By John Nicholson

Glancing backward

While employed as a boxmaker, at the old Upland Citrus Association, my father, Carl Nicholson, started seeing a lot of a local young lady, Blanche Hawthorne. Then, a short interruption came about. The disastrous freeze of 1913 temporarily reduced citrus fruit production to practically nil, and his job, among many others at the packing house, was eliminated.

Pop was lucky in finding a job at San Fernando. There, a big earthen dam was being built, to hold water, soon to be brought from the Owens Valley, by a new aqueduct, to supply the city of Los Angeles. He drove a team of mules which pulled a "Fresno Scraper," distributing the earthen fill dirt.

Returning to Upland, in 1914, he landed a job as a mechanic in an auto repair shop, owned by a Mr. Thomas, at 132 North Euclid. That building still stands, just south of Upland Savings and Loan. Pop became a good friend of another mechanic, there, W. L. (Bill) Waterman, who , with his wife Bertha, later owned the business. Cars were not very complex then, as compared to today, and becoming a good mechanic was not difficult.

Soon, Pop, Carl Nicholson and Blanche Hawthorne became engaged. They were married on July 3, 1914. As a honeymoon, they sailed from San Pedro, to Avalon, Catalina Island, on the old wooden steamer, Hermosa. They loved Catalina Island, and returned there often during the 1930s as guests of the Watermans on their 42 Ft. cruiser, the "Amiga."

Back in Upland, they settled down in Pop's little "board and batt" house at Ninth Street and 10th Avenue. They planted a number of rows of building process and has a great influence on our present day life."

A native of Etiwanda, Commissioner Bob Hickcox says, "The City of Rancho Cucamonga is a very young, dynamic city and a Historical Commission is most helpful in examining, recording and preserving its early history.

Etiwanda, in the eastern portion of the city, has a recorded history that begins with the filing of a Homestead by Isaiah P. Smith on May 6, 1870. This is the property that now has the oldest house in that area. The house, known as the Garcia-Chaffey House, was built in 1874 by Capt. J.S. Garcia and sold in 1882 to the Chaffey Brothers. That was the start of the Etiwanda Colony Lands."

Another commissioner and lifetime resident of Alta Loma, Eugene M. Billings states, "My concern is to try and preserve those things of historical value within Rancho Cucamonga. This would include structures, documents, and information. We encourage those who own structures of historical value to maintain or restore them as long as it is within economic reason."

The main concern, historically, for our community today is to preserve our past, not only for the present, but for the future generations to come.

Computer era comes to libraries, and there's more high-tech ahead

By Pat Castaneda

Library news

State of the art computer applications may be found in unexpected places. In your local library for instance.

Libraries, with their collections of books which have to be accounted for as they are checked in and out, with their borrowers' registration files, with their book classification systems, have traditionally been prime targets for automation, but at the same time they have been a challenge to the technology because of the complexity of their operations. Circulation control and cataloging have been two areas particularly affected by automation. There isn't a public library in the area that hasn't been touched by automation in one of these two functions.

Upland Library, for instance, has a computer produced catalog on microfiche which is read on fiche readers. The catalog contains holdings of all the Inland Library System libraries. Ontario Library has a circulation system which uses the computer of the Honnold Library to check books in and out, record borrowers, and identify overdues. San Bernardino County Library is in the process of installing a new circulation system which will perform similar jobs. They must convert the holdings lists of all their libraries to machine readable form. It is a huge task. The Riverside Public Library also has recently contracted for an automated circulation system which, like Ontario's and the County's, will instantly tell a patron or a librarian whether the book is in or when it is due back. These circulation systems will also catch the book when it is returned, if there is a reserve on it, by alerting the clerk.

All these libraries make use of one of the world's largest data bases for cataloging books. Thus, when a new book arrives at the library, its title or author or a combination of the two are keyed into the OCLC (Ohio College Library Consortium) computer terminal, and instantly all the information needed to catalog the book appears on the terminal screen. Author, title, date of publication, description of contents, and classification numbers using Dewey Decimal and Library of Congress classification systems are all listed. In the past this work was sweated out by librarians in each library causing much duplication of work and expense.

Doug Leo poses by his car, a Mazda RX-2 converted from a gas-powered rotary engine to one that is driven by electrical power.

Electric cars offer clean, economical —but slow—ride

A person riding in Doug Leo's Mazda Rx-2 for the first time may be in for a shock. The vehicle starts up without a sound, makes a humming noise like an airplane as it accelerates — and is powered entirely by golf cart batteries.

But this is not an example of a major automobile manufacturer seeking to develop an alternative source of fuel power. Rather, Leo, a 29-year-old optometrist who lives in Upland and works in Fontana, is a member of the Ontario-based Electric Vehicles Association (EVA). The EVA is a group of electric car enthusiasts from around the Southern California area.

Leo became interested in obtaining an electric car after attending one of the EVA's monthly meetings at the Ontario Library. The meeting featured a discussion by Leo Schatzl, a German emigre who was one of the key founders of the organization and who has designed many EVA members' electrical engines.

The make that Leo drives is standard fare as far as electric cars go. Without the support of the government or the automotive industry, these car owners are pretty much on their own as far as design and size of the engines go. They rely on each other for help, sharing whatever information they can on the subject.

"We all kind of work together," Leo says. "It takes several of us to put a car together, because each of us has different talents."

Electric car owners feel saddled by engines designed for gasoline-powered automobiles and burdened further by batteries too large and too weak to assemble the "ultimate" engine powered by electricity.

They usually must pour thousands of their own dollars into what is for most of them a second car — albeit one that requires little or no maintenance, contributes nothing in the way of noise pollution and belches no toxic gases into the air.

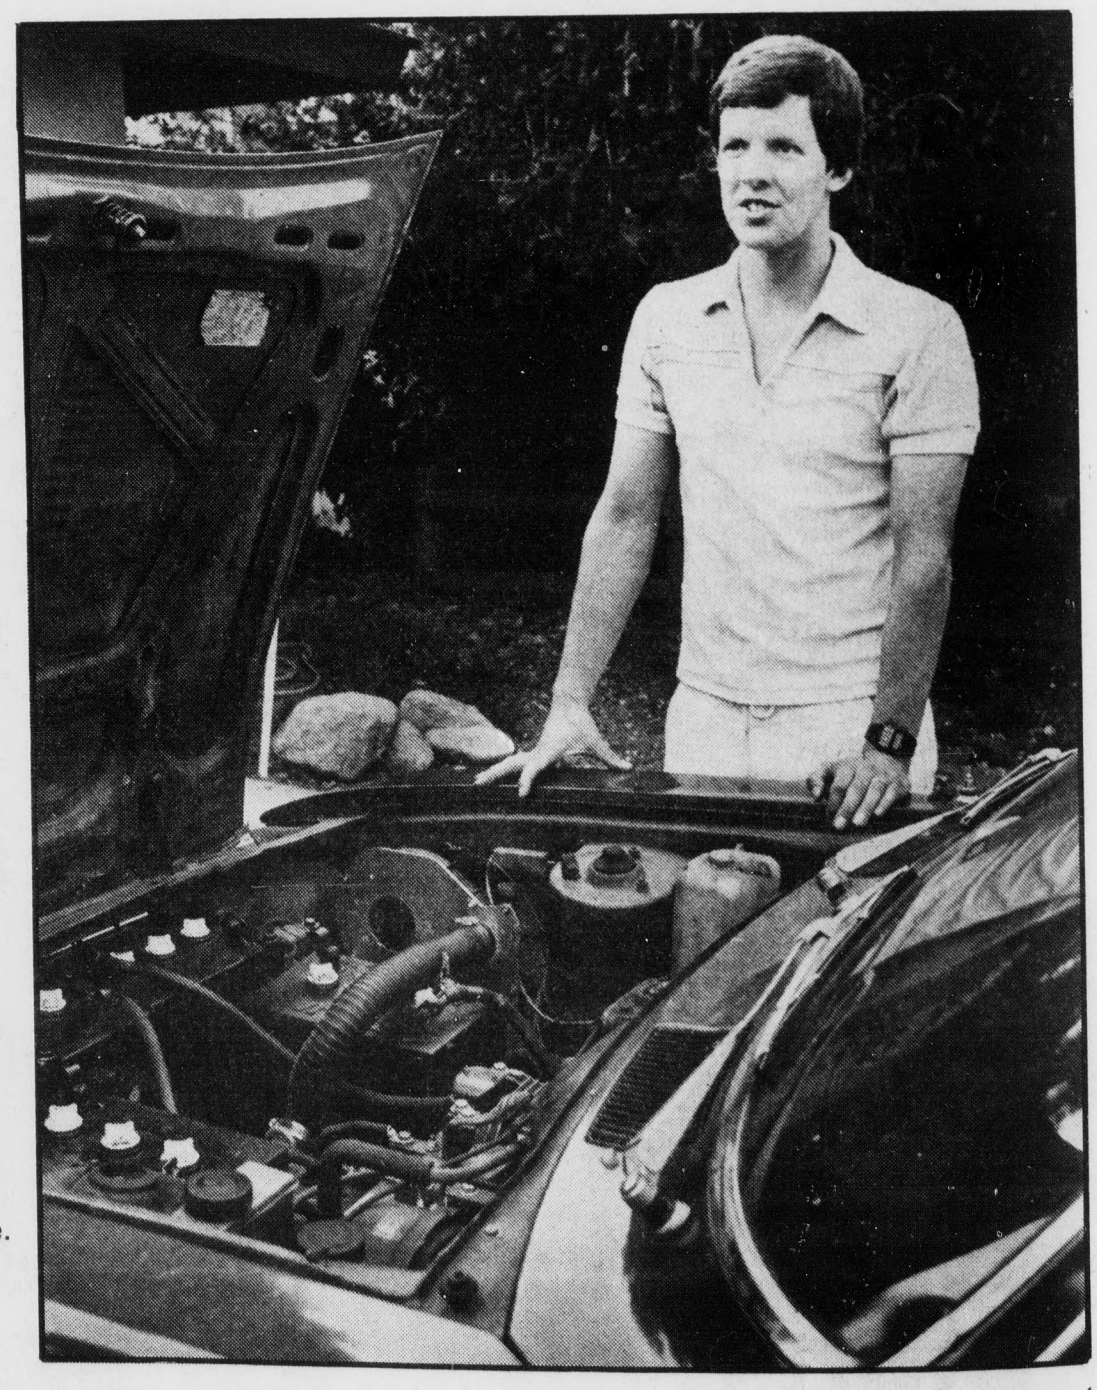

Leo's Mazda requires no gasoline, needs no oil or water (save for the dozen six-volt batteries which provide the vehicle's power) and doesn't need to be warmed up before he takes it out for a spin.

However, there are some limitations to this OPEC merchant's nightmare. The car's maximum range is roughly 35 miles per charge, Leo can go no faster than 30-35 miles per hour, and he has gotten more than his share of angry glares from drivers accustomed to life in the fast lane.

But when the owner of an electric car drives to the local supermarket, he or she can point to a neighbor's gasoline-powered auto and say, "That car pollutes the air. Mine does not."

Leo says he finds the concept

Leo's electrified Mazda, which runs on a dozen 6-volt batteries, requires minimal maintenance costs and is literally noise and pollution free. However, he stresses that it is strictly a second car, due primarily to its limited range and speed.

Pre-season concert planned for June 21

The traditional pre-season concert for the Redlands Summer Music Festival will be held on June 21, at 8:15 p.m. in the Redlands Bowl. Five winners were named after auditions on April 10th at the University of Redlands.

Richard Haseltine of Redlands, baritone, was the single junior division winner. Senior division winners were David Griswold, Redlands, piano; Elbert W. Shepperd III, Loma Linda, bass-baritone; Melody Bodor, Arcadia, UR student, and Lyndon Taylor, Loma Linda, both violinists.

Richard Haseltine has studied in Graz, Austria with the American Institute of Musical Studies; sang at the University of Redlands in the "Three Penny Opera" and with the John T. Hamilton Chorale in Riverside.

David Griswold is a first place winner of the State Music Teachers Association Concert Competition and Jazz and Improvisation first place winner of the Southwestern Music Festival. He will be attending Mannes College of Music in New York City next fall.

Elbert Shepperd III is a graduate of Loma Linda University in Speech Pathology. In 1982 he received a scholarship to the Aspen Music Festival. He was recently a soloist at the Loma Linda University's Fine Arts Festival.

Melody Bodor has been associated with the Melodia String Quartet and concert mistress of the all-state honor high school orchestra.

Lyndon Taylor is currently a medical student at Loma Linda University. He has toured Europe performing with the New England Youth Ensemble.

Have you noticed, something new has been added..hope you like our style. When you're thinking of eating out all you gotta do is turn to our restaurant pages and voila! Your choices are many as you can see.

First of all, I must remind you that there's more to Chinese cuisine than chop suey or chow mein. Also, it is not true that an hour after dining on Oriental food you're hungry again. You'll see what I mean if you follow some of the suggestions and veer off the beaten path. Try something different, you'll be as pleasantly surprised as I was.

Old Friend Chinese Restaurant at 1401 E. Foothill Blvd. in Upland wants you to come and try the truly delicious combinations offered. Clip the coupon and get a whopping 15% off any item on the dinner menu. I don't want to sway your choice but the lemon chicken is simply delicious. I'm sure you'll love it as much as I do.

I've told you about China Star Chinese Restaurant before, but it can't hurt to remind you that whether you choose to stop by for lunch or dinner you'll definitely get your money's worth. The selection will be difficult, but no matter what you choose, the food is prepared and served beautifully.

Recently, we enjoyed the shrimp with sizzling rice soup, the appetizer was the delightfully delicious pu-pu platter, then the tender and crisp Szechuan shrimp and the ever popular, tasty lemon chicken.

We had the honor of meeting the creative chef, Fred Sun, who learned the fine art of Chinese cookery in Taiwan, then came to California and spent several years perfecting his trade in Hollywood.

China Star is at 1141 N. Mountain Ave. in Ontario. Before you go please clip the coupon to save some money.

The Magic Lamp Inn invites you to come in and try the delicious buffet luncheon. It's served from 11:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. The buffet features three hot entrees plus roast beef carved at the buffet table. Then you'll get hot vegetables and potatoes plus 14 assorted salads and a yummy hot cobbler for dessert. All this will only cost you $5.75. College to stage musical dance production

The Chaffey College Theatre Arts Department will present "Gotta Dance" as its final offering of the 1982-83 season. This multi-styled musical dance production will be presented in the Chaffey College Theatre, June 10, 11, 17 and 18 at 8:30 p.m.

Directed by George Reeder, "Gotta Dance" will consist of a cast of 10 men and 20 women ranging in ages from 9 to 50. There will be a wide variety of dance styles used in the show including waltz, ballet, modern, tango, and tap. All of these styles are part of the program in the dance instruction of the theatre arts department.

The experience Reeder offers the audience promises to be a colorful, highly-skilled showcase of local talent. In addition, students receive the experience of putting together a major dance production. The cast of "Gotta Dance" is composed of students from the dance and performing arts classes who auditioned for the production. Performance experience among the dancers ranges from several years for some to very little for others, the difference in background and goals of each student is just as varied.

The title "Gotta Dance" comes from the name of the dance routine that director Reeder performed with Gene Kelly in the movie, "Singin' in the Rain," which highlighted a successful Broadway and Hollywood career during which Reeder worked with such performers as Barbra Streisand, Zero Mostel, Jerome Robbins, and Judy Garland. Assisting in the production are dance instructors Michelle Jenkins and Christy Reeder who will also direct some of the choreography. "Gotta Dance" follows last year's highly successful "The Magic of Dance" with 15 dancers from that show returning.

Pat Skinner is designing in more than 100 costumes for "Gotta Dance" and Gary Skinner is designing the elaborate lighting. The music styles will vary from the modern sounds of Toto to the modern classic arrangements of Gershwin.

Curtain for "Gotta Dance" will open promptly at 8:30. Tickets are $4 for adults and $3 for students. Early reservations are advisable and may be made by calling the Chaffey College Theatre Box Office at 987-1737, extension 524.

Mark Taper offers two plays for repertory festival

The Mark Taper Forum and acting artistic director Kenneth Brecher have announced plans for "Rep Three," the 1983 spring repertory festival and fifth event of the Taper's 16th season at the Los Angeles Music Center.

Two classics, "A Month in the Country" by Ivan Turgenev and Shakespeare's "Richard III," will be performed in a repertory schedule through July 24.

Rep Three marks the third year in the Taper's long-range plans to develop a permanent repertory company at the Music Center.

Russian writer Turgenev's finest play, "A Month in the Country," written in 1850, will be directed by Tom Moore, who directed one of the repertory plays last year, "A Flea in Her Ear."

Shakespeare's tale of the archvillain Richard, Duke of Gloucester, and his Machiavellian scheming to gain the throne, "Richard III," will be directed by Diana Maddox.

"A Month in the Country" has opened and "Richard III" opens tonight.

For further information, including the Taper subscriber bonus of 2-tickets-for-the-price-of-1, please call (213) 972-7654.

One way or the other, you get a great deal.

Rainmaker to be presented in Claremont

Claremont's Circle V Players will present the Rainmaker on Wednesday, June 5, 11, and 12. A perennial favorite of theatergoers, this romantic comedy tells of a ranch family's struggle with a life-threatening drought and how a young woman finds the romance she thought would never come.

Duane Thomas fills the title role with the same charisma which has delighted many audiences as Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof. All of the cast members are experienced actors, with many faces familiar to local audiences. They include Augie Sodaro and Dick Reinhard of Claremont, Harold Goodell and Michael Johnson of Pomona, Chris Mariott of Cucamonga, and Tim Corvin of Montclair.

From Upland, Jim Felix is making this production his debut as a local director. He has become seen on stage in many lead roles during recent years.

Performances are presented at 509 S. College Ave. in Claremont, with curtain times at 8 p.m. Saturday and 7:30 p.m. Sunday. Ticket price is $3.50. A dinner theatre is planned for June 5. Food will be served at 6:30 p.m. and the combined dinner/show price is $8 . Phone 626-4634 for reservations. The Circle V Players is sponsored by the Claremont Valley Church of Religious Science.

tching er s

San Bernardino County residents can rest assured somebody ching over them, literally.

The watcher is a sheriff's deputy on an aerial beat, patrolling the ground from a 500-foot vantage point.

Whether it's a burglary in progress, a hot pursuit or an overdue Mt. Baldy hiker, 40-King zooms where patrol cars cannot go.

"40-King" is what law enforcement agencies call the sheriff's airborne fleet.

The fleet's size has doubled since 1971, when two small choppers were bought with federal grant money. Two jet helicopters were added in 1974, ones that can be airborne in 90 seconds.

Based at the Rialto airport, the aviation program now uses Bell UH-1B "Huey" helicopters, small Hughes 500D copters and fixed-wing planes.

Besides patrolling the ground, the choppers are unmatched on search and rescue missions. The helicopters can transport deputies or the injured, search for missing craft, and because they can carry water, can help fight fires.

None of the division's planes were paid for by the department.

One was donated by a wealthy supporter of the program. Another was confiscated in a narcotics bust. A third was found abandoned in a desert, also probably loot in a drug deal, department spokesmen said.

Cities with their own police departments contract with the sheriff's office for emergency help from 40-King.

Upland calls on 40-King only during emergencies or in unusual circumstances, but not for routine patrol, Capt. Gary Hart.

The helicopters are "so valuable, there's hardly a way you can put a cost value on them," Sheriff Floyd Tidwell said. "They are more help to the troops on the ground than anything we have."

Some residents complain about the deafening whirl of the chopper's blades and the blinding spotlight used during night patrol, he said. Others complain when they haven't seen or heard it for awhile.

The sheriff said lack of funds prevents the department from immediate expansion of the aviation program.

Presently, 14 different jurisdictions contract with the county and patrol 19,800 square miles of desert, said Capt. Terry Jagerson, the aviation division chief.

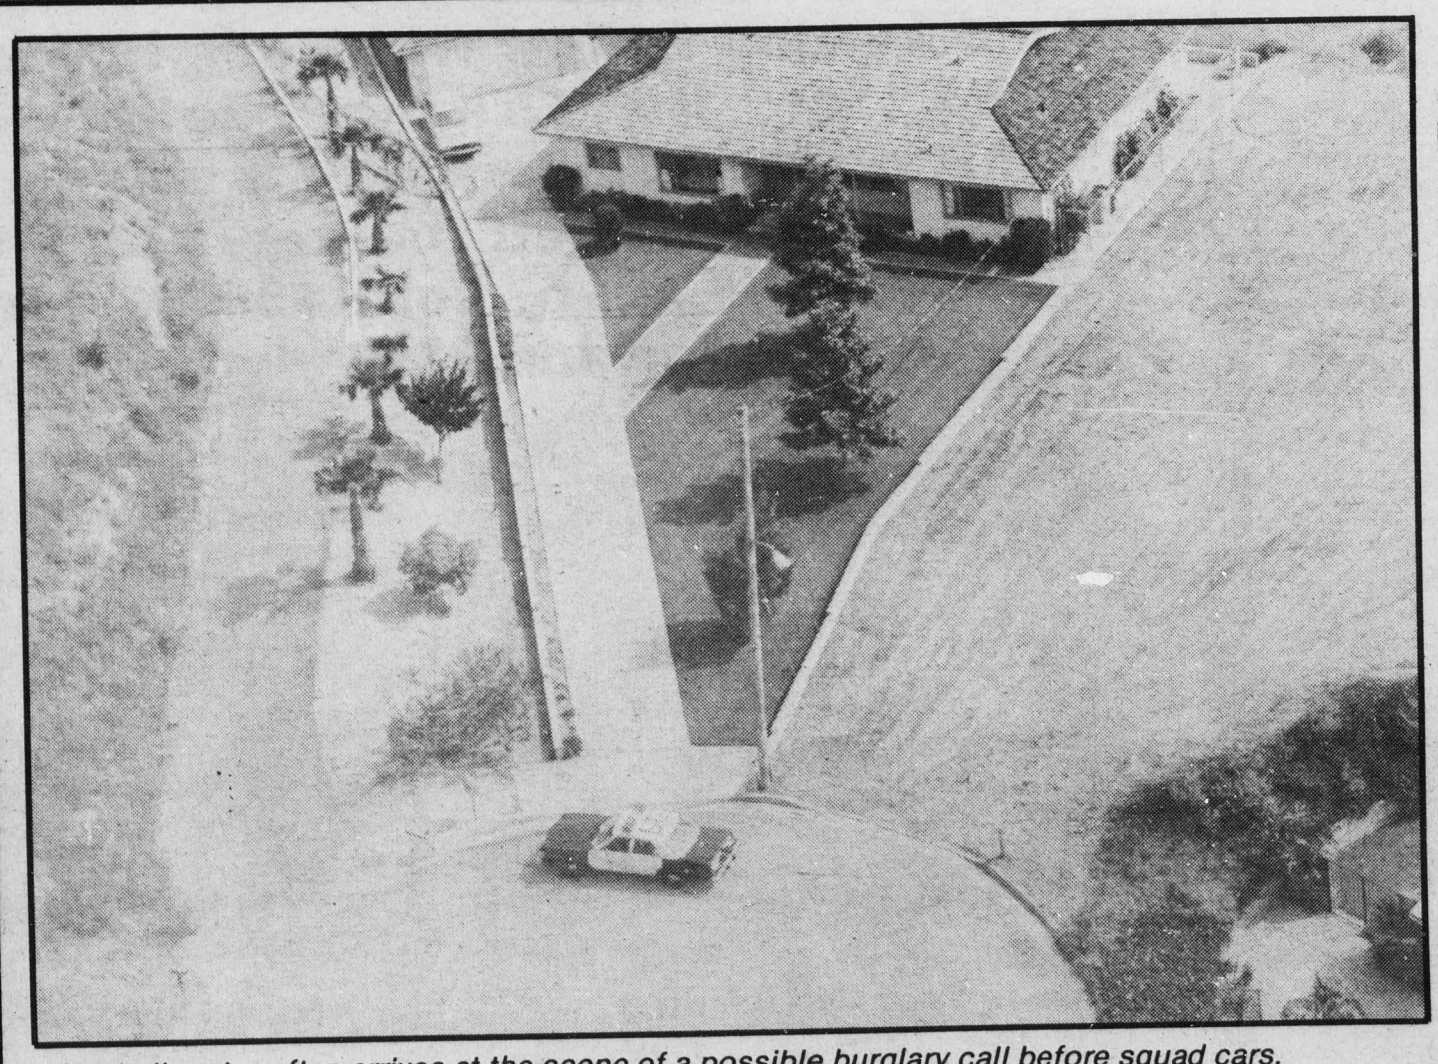

When a non-contract agency needs help or a hot pursuit crosses county lines, 40-King knows no boundaries. "We can't very well stop," Jagerson said.

New technology allows for the jet-powered Sheriff's helicopters to become airborne within minutes.

, equips himself with a ding into the skies.

The helicopter often arrives at the scene of a possible burglary call before squad cars.

The helicopters are "so valuable, there's hardly a way you can put a cost value on them," Sheriff Floyd Tidwell said. "They are more help to the troops on the ground than anything we have."

Libraries computerized

What does the future hold for high-tech applications in the library? Well, in the near future look for coin-operated microcomputers and collections of software which may be checked out, as well as more and more use of microcomputers for clerical tasks. Later, look for automated catalogs where you type in an author, title or subject and find your entry even though you mispelled it. Look for screens of catalog information where a finger's touch gets you the entries for which yo'' are searching. Watch for cable stations offer ng access to your local library computer. Just a quick check on your TV and you will know if the library has the book and whether it is checked out.

Look for libraries in your area offering "teleconferencing" services. Groups of people anywhere can gather at appropriately equipped locations and communicate via TV and telephone.

Look for increased capabilities in larger libraries to make computer searches of very large data bases for lists of materials on specialized subjects. Thus, if you have a paper due on the Zoot Suit Riots in 1940's Los Angeles, and you can't find enough material, you might search a large data base such as that operated by the New York Times for a list of books and articles. Such a search might cost you $10.

But, while you're looking for all these new gadgets and services in the library of the future, don't forget to look for your book, too. It will still be there, and it will continue to be the library's main reason for existence.

blackberrys on the front of the lot, now occupied by Coffey's Market. The berrys grew on wires supported on posts, and in berry season, they had plenty to sell.

Then, on November 15, 1915, I arrived on the scene, either by stork, or by some other more complicated method. I was there, but the details are now a bit fuzzy. I was named John Raymond Nicholson, but my middle name did not stick forever. More about that, much later.

I can recall a few details of my first three years, there, some printable, and at least one not so. I soon learned that when the berrys were ripe, the real black ones were delicious. Mom and Pop tried to stop me from helping myself when I complained of the scratchiness of berry seeds in my diaper.

One day, Mom was bathing me when the wash cloth stuck on a tiny, sharp, metallic thing coming through the skin on my left chest. She phoned Pop, who raced home, and we were off to the doctor's office. Upland's several doctors were located in the building that is now Silverthorne's Upland Pharmacy, at 296 North Second Avenue.

Dr. Mary Craig checked me. She dabbed the spot with ether, or something that "froze" it, and using tweezers, pulled out an entire sewing needle, minus the thread. It was evidently something I had found and swallowed, which had found it's way hither and yon and came out there.

For many years, I had a small scar where "Doctor Mary" had pulled out the needle. It's hard to find now. But, oddly enough, when my son, Dan, was born, nearly 20 years later, he had an identical mark in the same place. As they say, "Like father, like son."

Three years and four days after I arrived in town, I got a sister, Mildred Virginia Nicholson. When Mom felt the event was close, Pop called Dr. Mary. This was November 16, 1918, and the nationwide "flu" epidemic was rampant. All doctors were nearly exhausted by administering to the needs of the many "Flu" victims. They even enlisted the aid of any volunteers who would help.

One such helper, who came through unphased, claimed his resistance was due to keeping himself well dosed with whiskey. He claimed that any flu bug that came near him folded quicker than those roaches on today's TV spots for Black Flag.

When Dr. Mary arrived, expecting to deliver Mildred, she decided she was a bit early. Being totally tuckered out, she crawled into bed with Mom, and snoozed until the big moment was close. She told Pop to boil water, lots of it. The use of the boiling water, done on a wood fired stove, is questionable, but it did help to keep expectant fathers busy and somewhat out of the way. And thus, my sister, Mildred arrived very nicely.

Shortly, my uncle, Ed Nicholson, Pop's half brother, returned from duty in the Navy, during World War I. Among the many tales he told, was one about a method of communicating with other ships and land stations, out of sight, well beyond the horizon. He said it was called Marconi, or wireless, and even radio. Pop marveled at what a purveyor of baloney Ed had become while in the service, as nothing like that could be possible.

100 building permits valued at $2.5 million

The Upland Department of Building and Safety issued a total of 100 permits for a valuation of $2.5 million during the month of April.

The report showed the lion's share was issued for residential buildings, with 21 for single family homes with a combined value of $1.85 million.

Records showed 11 permits, valued at $1.1 million, were issued for additions and alterations, another 29, with a value of $67,606, for walls and fences, and five, valued at $6,310, for patios and patio roofs.

Other residential permits issued were five for repairs valued at $13,200, and 12 for swimming pools, with a value of $82,460.

One permit was issued for the construction of a commercial building with the valuation set at $250,000.

The city issued 10 permits for additions or alterations of commercial buildings with a value estimated at $122,044. The only other commercial or industrial permit issued was one for repairs to commercial or industrial, with a value of $3,600.

The Department of Building and Safety also issued three permits for signs, valued at $3,000, and two for solar devices valued at $7,960.

Recreation department moves again — and again

By Joy Sommer

They could be termed the vagabonds among city departments — they've picked up all their possessions and hit the road four times in the last eight years and they are eying just one more move before they settle for good.

"We've about got it down to an art," said recreation director Larry Thornberg with a rueful grimace. "By now we know what to move first and we're real experts in packing."

Recreation's newest move found them moving from the old building next to the police department on D Street to quarters behind the station that served as the police department's locker room.

"We lost about 2,000 square feet in program space and about 1,000 square feet in office space," Thornberg said. "Now we are stacking (classes scheduled with one beginning when another ends) our classes and storing a lot of or records in the facility on C Street."

The program space problem, as they expected, as been the most irritating. "It's very difficult to get classes in and out without disturbing classes in session. Often one class needs tables and chairs while the next one needs mats and now there is no time to remove the chairs to make room for the mats because of stacking."

Thornberg said at this point they have not had to reduce the number of classes offered and they will be unable to expand with any new offering until a new building is available.

Thornberg said they are now talking to architects on the design of new recreation building to be constructed at Magnolia Park.

The thought of that new building is what has made this move and the crowding bearable for the recreation staff Thornberg said.

"I think now that the staff realizes we are going to get a permanent home, it was easier to accept another move. Since we know it's coming somewhere down the line, we can make do."

Making do with inconvenience is not limited to having records stored three blocks from the office, Thornberg said. "I would think not having a bathroom or any running water in the building has been the hardest thing to get used to for us."

When nature calls, the staff of five makes their way over to either the Fire Department or the Police Station to use their facilities. If they need running water, there's a spigot outside the building.

Edison workers take tests

Several hundred Southern California Edison employees took advantage of the free medical screening services offered at SCE's second annual Health Fair in mid-May.

Edison is believed to be the first company in the nation to offer a concentrated battery of tests and counseling services for its employees, according to Dr. Jack E. Hauck, SCE medical director.

More than a dozen health care agencies participated in checking blood pressure, stress, eyesight and lungs, testing for diabetes and doing weight consultation.

Pictures of his 15 Claremont football teams serve as a reminder to athletic director John Zinda's athletic background with the Stags.

Christopher Agler

Zinda tackles new set of problems

By Charles Bentley

In the halls of academia, it doesn't take long for the relentless wheels of bureaucracy to start rolling.

John Zinda's new seat as athletic department chairperson isn't even warm yet, and already his desk is crowded with paperwork.

The Upland resident isn't a newcomer to the tri-college athletic department. Save for last year's sabbatical leave to serve as junior varsity football coach at USC, Zinda has spent 15 years as head football coach of the Claremont McKenna/Harvey Mudd Stags.

Zinda seems a natural choice to fill the shoes of former athletic director Dr. Bill Arce, who founded the department in 1958. Arce recently resigned to become assistant director of college relations at Claremont McKenna, where he will deal mainly with fundraising for the athletic department.

"Bill and I know each other very well and I look for us to continue to work together for the good of the department," Zinda says. "In this day and age, the department has grown to a point where it takes a lot of effort just to keep enough funds coming in from outside sources to keep everything rolling.

"I think a lot of colleges have come to this point and seen athletics as extraneous, extracurricular activities that can be cut from the budget. I'm pleased to see that our people here recognize the importance of the department as well as the intercollegiate teams."

A 1960 Cal State Los Angeles graduate who will receive his master's degree in sports administration from the U.S. Sports Academy (Mobile, Ala.) this June, Zinda appears at first to fit the bill as the "progressive thinking" athletic director. One of his very first tasks as AD was to hire a sports information director (Grayle Howlett, formerly with Cal Poly Pomona), the college's first full-time SID.

'I think a lot of colleges have come to this point and seen athletics as extraneous, extracurricular activities that can be cut from the budget. I'm pleased to see that our people here recognize the importance of the department as well as the intercollegiate teams.'

John Zinda

"I strongly believe that you have to promote your own program from within," Zinda explains. " You have to let people know what's happening, to get that information in front of the public. It can only help the program in the long run."

Yet tempering all his decisions is the bright flame of traditional thought on such basic concepts as the idea of the student-athlete and the role athletics should play on the Division III level.

"I'm a firm believer that a school's athletic department is the spirit of the institution. It helps reflect what its students feel. A student did a survey a while back to test Claremont athletes against other Claremont students to see how much more aggressive the athletes were.

"He found out that the opposite was actually true, that on the most part, our students are as intense and aggressive — and usually more so — as the athletes. But that's not a big surprise to me."

Since moving from the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) to the NCAA Division III, the Claremont Colleges have become recognized as a small college power in several sports, notably tennis and water polo.

In fact, the water polo team will participate in the prestigious Irvine Tournament this fall, competing against the best teams in the country on any level.

But the colleges aren't shifting their emphasis from academics toward athletic strength. That's a path Zinda wouldn't even consider. He firmly believes that both athletic and academic growth are not only attainable, but must come hand-in-hand for either to mean anything to today's college athlete.

He also questions the thought of a smaller program such as Claremont-Mudd trying to compete with its larger neighbors.

"This (Southern California) is a very difficult area. There are not enough Division III schools on the West Coast, so you wind up playing NAIA teams or Division II, IA or IAA clubs. That's an issue in itself, whether

These young girls readily take to diamonds

By Phillip Barnett

Just a short time after women began their crusade to get out of the kitchen and out into the world, their daughters decided, too, that maybe it was time to push aside their doll houses, don a glove and take little brother's shortstop position on the Little League baseball team.

Yes, the female sex has arrived, making its mark in everything from politics to Little League baseball. Now, it's not unusual to scan a Little League roster and see names like Pam, Gloria, Nancy and Julie on it.

In Upland's National Little League, the Crown Toyota A's welcome the services of 12-year-old Denise Hawkins. According to coach Terry Sandoval, the team has had one girl on its roster in each of the last three years.

"They (the girls) do pretty well with the boys," says Sandoval. "We run a well disciplined squad, so there are never any instances with teasing or anything like that."

Hawkins, who is in her first year with the A's says she decided to try out for an all-boys team because of the higher level of competition.

"You just get a better chance of winning here," says Hawkins. "In softball, the ball just rolls off your bat, and that's what I hate about it."

Sandoval points out that Hawkins earned a spot in center field because of her speed.

Hawkins indicates that she has received no problems from her teammates or the opposition. Her parents didn't mind, and her mother comes to watch her every chance she gets.

"I can't say I've been going good, but for the first year, I've been trying," says Hawkins.

Ten-year-old Mia White, who plays second base for the Red Sox in Vineyard Little League, became the first girl to play in that league in five years when she signed up last season.

"At first there were a few problems. But after the boys saw her play and saw that she could handle herself, everything was alright," explains Curtis White, Mia's father and manager of the Red Sox.

It was Mia's father who suggested that she sign up for the team.

"When we first moved here (Alta Loma), my neighbor, who was manager of the Royals, showed us some of the boys in their uniforms. Then I asked Mia if she liked to wear one of those. She said she didn't care and we signed her up with the Red Sox," says Curtis.

"My cousins played, and I liked it so I decided to play, too." says Mia. "I

American LL sets meeting

Upland American Little League will hold its annual board meeting and general election on June 14 at Raney-Schnepp Field.

In addition to the elections, president Mike Oliver has indicated there may be some constitutional revisions.

The meeting is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. on the league's field, located on 8th Street between San Antonio and Mountain.

"This is a very important meeting," said Oliver. "It's probably the single most important gathering our league has each year."

the NCAA should allow interplay between Division III and Division I clubs. That seems to tarnish somewhat the whole purpose of the Division III, doesn't it?" Zinda says.

"Ideally, from a philosophic point of view, a Division III school should compete with only Division III clubs and not go outside that. But coaches and athletes (and alumni) being what they are, there's always another mountain to be climbed."

These are not exactly the kind of ideas one gets while spending a year around the high-powered USC athletic program. But Zinda didn't go to the USC campus to pick up philosophical ideals to bring back and use to change things at Claremont. Actually, the trip was more a vacation than anything else.

"You have to understand, I was on what I refer to as a football coach's holiday. I wasn't involved in the day-to-day program itself," he explains. "To me it was the optimum situation, to be able to concentrate on football — just football — with nothing else to interrupt from the time I got up in the morning until I went to bed at night. It was a terrific, incredible experience for me.

"It was unique also in that there was no pressure on me to perform, just work on football for 17 hours a day," he says, laughing.

All in all, Zinda was able to experience a lot of things while coaching the Trojan jayvee team and assisting the varsity staff that he could never have on the sideline at Claremont.

"I'd always wondered what it was like to play in front of a huge crowd," admits the former Litle League baseball coach. "Here at Claremont, we don't have very large crowds. So when USC played down at Florida last year, in front of 75-80,000 fans, I was really interested to see what it was like.

"You know," he remembers, "once the game started, the crowd evaporated. Sure, it was still there, but it was off in the background. It's just part of the game, and you don't tend to notice it that much."

Zinda does admit to bringing back "reams and reams" of material that he feels can only improve the Stags football program. But he's quick to point out that he also was able to confirm a few of his long-time beliefs as well as learning a few new tricks.

"Football players at USC are no different that those on the high school or small college level," says Zinda.

"You have the same various personalities, the same team feelings. Only size, shape and speed are different."

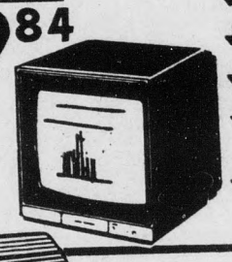

But the "holiday" is long since past, and Zinda is at present trying to fit into his new post without making any radical transformations to what he feels is already a top-notch athletic department.

like playing with the boys because softball is so boring. It's just a bunch of girls who don't know what to do."

Mis says she gets along with her teammates and enjoys her spot at second base.

"They used to tease me at first, but then they stopped after they saw how good I was," she boasts.

Another second baseman who has made her input on the diamond is 10-year-old Angie Lum of Allura, an Upland National Legue major league team.

"She can out play most of the boys in the league," says her coach Frank Medina. "She doesn't play like a girl. She's not afraid of the ball or being run over by bigger kids. She just can't be scared."

"She's okay. She's better than any other girl I've ever seen. She hits good," says teammate Ray Ynostroza.

"When she first came out, the boys went home saying 'we have a girl on our team,' but after that first practice, they stopped saying it," informs Medina.

BUY AN ENERGY EFFICIENT REFRIGERATOR.

Get Cold Cash.

$50 OR $100

It's important to look at operating costs and efficiency when shopping for a new refrigerator/freezer.

Why? Because the average unit accounts for up to 35% of your electricity bill.

If you're an Edison customer, Edison will help defray the cost of a new energy-efficient model by paying you $50 or $100 upon proof of purchase of any qualifying model.

Models 12 cubic feet or larger which are 20% more efficient than the applicable State Standard qualify for a $50 incentive. And if the model uses 960 kilowatt hours per year or less, it earns an additional bonus of $50.

To help you shop for your new appliance, or to help you wisely use the refrigerator you now have, we have prepared a new booklet, "Cold Cash." This book gives you tips on wise use and includes a list of refrigerators that are eligible for these cash incentives.

The booklet is available from your local Edison office, at participating dealers or by calling Edison toll-free 1-800-952-5062.

You have the power to hold down your electricity bills. Make your next refrigerator an energy-efficient model. And get cold cash from us. Meantime, thanks for all your conservation efforts.

Local group plugs into electric cars of the electric car itself to his liking, and he hopes that eventually all cars will run on electric power. "It is more energy-efficient and pollution free, and on days when it is really smoggy, you kind of wish that everybody was driving an electric car to work," he says.

Despite its limited range, Leo's car does in many ways appear to be more efficient fuel-wise than its gas-powered counterparts. Adapted from a burned out Mazda rotary engine purchased for several hundred dollars (most electric car owners acquire their autos in a similar fashion), Leo must charge the car roughly eight hours for every 35 miles he or wife Kathy wish to drive. By his figuring, that's just over four cents per unit of fuel.

Four batteries sit under the hood and the remaining eight are found in the trunk. An auxiliary unit, also located in the trunk, powers the lights and other accessories. To fuel up, Leo simply unlocks cover protecting the "fuel tank" and simply plugs it in.

He turns the key just like on a "normal" car and it starts right up, though without the usually revving sound that a gas-engine makes. Thanks to some minor adjustments, Leo is able to shift gears much like he would with a standard manual transmission.

However, he usually doesn't go any higher than third gear. The car runs best on about 125 amperes (measure of the flow of electric current). To make the car go any faster would require additional amperes and the extra output would reduce the car's already limited range capabilities.

He has owned this, his first electric car for about a year now, and after approximately 3,000 miles, Leo says he has yet to have any serious problems with it. Again, since it requires no fluids other than water in the batteries and since there are no spark plugs to worry about (he has had to change one small fuse, he says), the maintenance costs have been almost non-existent.

The main problem, aside from the automobile industry's apparent unwillingness to delve into the world of electric automobiles, is the batteries.

"One of the things that is always plaguing electric car owners is weight. You try to get the weight of the car down as much as possible since the batteries are so heavy," Leo says.

"We're still living in the past with the lead/acid battery. The lead/acid battery has been around since the first car came out."

Most advocates of electric power maintain that the technology already exists for the construction of the "ultimate" battery and the ultimate electric engine. However, they also say that due to the high profitability of the auto parts business, the automotive industry is in no hurry to develop a product that will produce little — if any — need for replacement parts.

"Think of how much the auto industry relies on auto parts sales," Leo says. "During the recent crunch on car sales, the auto parts business was doing really well. So they aren't going to like the idea very much."

They also believe that energy costs would not rise dramatically even if thousands of persons were to switch to electric cars immediately. People could charge their cars at night, when energy usage is normally reduced, and they say that the additional demand would still not be enough to put a strain on the electric companies.

Not only that, but they consider the benefits to be an investment in the future. "You have to consider that it is a mode of transportation, too," Leo says.

"Maybe a European car maker or a Japanese car maker will come up with one and shake (American auto makers) up," he adds. "That's what happened with the economy cars.

"We have to take a gasoline engine and convert it. If auto engineers were to design it from the ground up, you'd have a more efficient engine."

For now, however, he seems willing to live with the car's shortcomings. If he is on the road and some speedster wants to get by, Leo lets him pass. "You can't be a hot-headed person and drive and electric car," he says.

The auto seems to have created an outlet for his sense of humor. He says he's like to pull into a gasoline service station some day and ask the attendant to "fill it up."

Or: "Some day I'd like to get pulled over for speeding."

No doubt that in that instance, the police officer might be in for a shock as well.

'Deflooder' is Red Adair of carpet cleaning

By Jim Marxen

Woody Gosnell ordered up a telephone book from one of his assistants.

"You look in the yellow pages and what do you see? You see advertisements for companies that say they do water damage," he said.

Rising from his chair, the self-proclaimed guru of carpet cleaners paced halfway around his desk. "I don't do water damage," he said, balling his hand into a fist, "I undo it."

Like a country preacher, Gosnell drives his point home with a sharp drawl and a passion for what he says.

"You give me a call and I can put together 100 trucks in 40 minutes," he proclaimed.

His book on deflooding has become a bible of sorts to members of the Carpex Coalition of Deflooding Specialists — an organization Gosnell helped found two years ago.

The 200-page treatise, (modestly entitled, "Deflooding and Restoration"), includes chapters like "An Indepth Look at Mildew and Bacteria" and "Interesting Facts About Water".

So much effort was poured into the work that Gosnell says he needs six years to turn novice carpet cleaners into four-star deflooders.

Six years on the subject of carpet cleaning?

"... and you still wouldn't know all there is to know," he added.

With single-minded determination, Woody Gosnell is on a mission to transform what he calls "water suckers" into noble, respected professionals.

"Ten or 20 years ago we were in the realm of the used car salesman," he said.

But his voice is tinged with pride when he reads that 70 of 100 people surveyed by the game show "Family Feud" put carpet cleaners on the top of the list of those they considered professionals.

"Through the years we will become even better," he proclaimed.

In 1971 no one ever heard the word "deflooding." And unless they paid attention to the radio business, no one in carpet cleaning had ever heard of Woody Gosnell either.

But after years in the radio business, Gosnell was ready to make his mark in an industry not known for producing big names.

"I was getting no personal satisfaction in radio," he said. "So I asked myself, 'What am I doing here? Who wants to be a 50-year-old disc jockey?'"

He remembered a proposition someone once put to him.

"I had been unhappy with the janitorial service in our building," he recalled. "So I complained and the owner of the service came in and wanted to know why I was so unhappy.

"I told him I could do a better job, so he challenged me.

"I took his men and did a better job and he offered me a job if I ever wanted to leave radio."

It was the chance Woody had been waiting for.

Gosnell began wiping down walls for $2 an hour and eventually worked his way up to foreman.

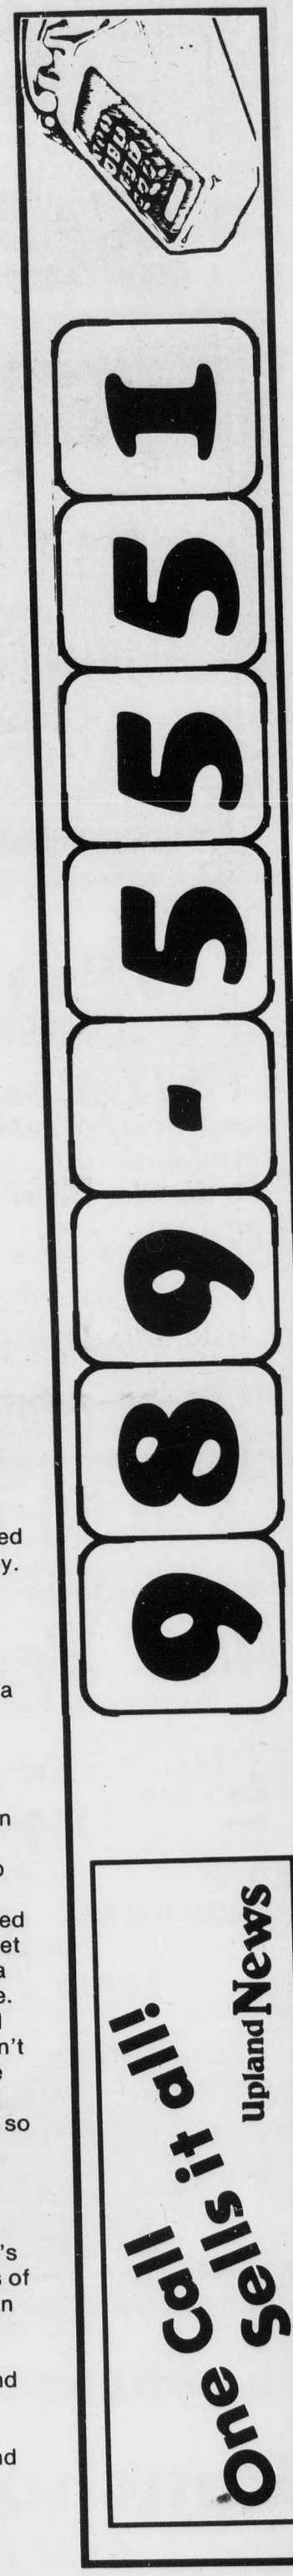

One day an employee spilled 10 gallons of water on a carpet — an accident that became a turning point in Gosnell's life.

"I knew I was going to end up buying that carpet if I didn't do something," he said. "We could suck the water out but then the mildew would grow so I said to myself, 'this can be reversed'."

Gosnell dubbed the technique deflooding.

In addition to the book he's written on about 1,800 kinds of spots. He says his reputation has spread so far that when there's a flood in Boston, someone usually gets around to calling him.

He publishes a monthly newsletter on deflooding and speaks on the subject regularly. On top of that he helped organize the first nationwide deflooders convention which will take place June 16, 17, 18 and 19 in Rancho Cucamonga.
